National Police Record Check (NPRC)

Explanatory Notes

Legislation in various states and territories and the Commonwealth of Australia restricts the information that can be disclosed about a person's court outcomes unless specific exemptions apply under law. Legislative exemptions can include specific types of employment, voluntary work, licenses or membership of a profession. The information provided will include all disclosable convictions or findings of guilt by a court.

The information provided will include disclosable court outcomes and/or pending charges which may or may not include traffic matters.

A NPRC may also include supplementary person history information which could include outstanding matters such as warrants or pending court cases. It is important to note that, until such a time as an outstanding matter has been determined by a court it cannot be regarded as a finding of guilt.

A pending charge is a charge of an offence that has not yet been disposed of by a court and can be disclosed in compliance with various State, Territory and Commonwealth legislation, and/or the policies governing the disclosure of pending charges by police services.

There is a time lapse between the recording of convictions by courts and the updating of police information and reference systems. This certificate only reflects the completeness and accuracy of these records on the date displayed on this certificate.

This check has been conducted on the basis of the name and date of birth details supplied by the person as provided above. Every care has been taken to ensure the accuracy of the check however, given the fingerprints are not taken by the police services in Australia in all instances, it is possible that the police information and reference systems may contain information recorded against this person under another name or alias.
